Off-duty PA cop raced in to help

By BRIAN HARMON

The two sons of Port Authority Police Officer George Howard stood tall yesterday and led grieving relatives behind the hearse carrying his coffin.

Christopher, 19, held the arm of his grandmother Arlene with one hand and cradled his aunt Geri Anne with the other.

Robert, 13, clutched his grandmother's other hand as they led mourners into St. Ignatius Catholic Church in Hicksville, L.I.

"You don't necessarily have to follow in your father's career path," George Howard's older brother Robert told the boys during a 30-minute eulogy. "But whatever you do, do it well and do it with your father's spirit in mind."

The 44-year-old cop died when a giant slab of metal fell on him in the collapse of 2 World Trade Center.

He was off work and sitting in front of his computer at home in Hicksville, L.I., when the disaster unfolded Sept. 11.

Howard sped to his post at Kennedy Airport and hopped a rescue truck headed for lower Manhattan. He made it to the twin towers moments before the second tower collapsed.

His body was found in front of where the towers once stood.

"He didn't have to go, but he did anyway," said the Rev. James Devine, a Port Authority chaplain. "George gave his life saving others, not only on Sept. 11, 2001. He spent a lifetime saving others."

Cop recalled with chuckles

Days after the disaster, Arlene Howard presented her son's badge to President Bush when the commander-in-chief met with relatives of missing cops and firefighters.

Bagpipers played "Minstrel Boy" as Howard's boys marched into the church for the final goodbye to a dad who was remembered as many things to many people.

Howard was a police officer at JFK, a volunteer firefighter in Hicksville and a soccer and lacrosse coach for his kids.

He was recalled with chuckles for his spirited leadership and ability to talk his way past any obstacle. His ex-wife, Eleonora Howard, sat with other relatives.

"When it's my time and I find the gates of heaven closed, I will yell through the gates for George," said Port Authority Police Lt. Kevin Hasa. "If anyone knows how to get through that gate, it's George."

Devine recalled the moment Howard talked him into rappelling with him down a building during a practice rescue at JFK — then snapped a photo for his scrapbook.

"Boy, did you look scared," Christopher Howard told the priest this week.

Execs' lives celebrated

After the Mass, the Howard boys led the procession out of the church. They stood straight and watched seven pallbearers carry their dad's coffin back into the hearse as a single police helicopter buzzed overhead.

Once again, it was time for "Minstrel Boy."

In Manhattan, another overflow crowd mourned the loss of brothers Joseph and Daniel Shea, two top executives at the bond trading firm of Cantor Fitzgerald, who are missing in the World Trade Center attack.

About 500 people filled St. Ignatius Loyola Church on Park Ave. for what was called a celebration of the lives of Joseph, 47, and Daniel, 37.

"In far too few years, Joe and Dan accomplished so much and touched so many," said the Rev. Jeff Johnston. "Though our eyes may not see them, we will feel them forever in our hearts."

The pastor also read from a passage written by Joseph Shea's son, Pat, to accompany a photo essay about his father's life.

"Although this is the end of the biography, it's not the end of my father's story," the essay read. "He's my role model, and he's loved by many people."

Stadium service eyed – park plan put off

Plans for a million-person memorial gathering in Central Park on Sunday have been canceled, but a prayer service at another city landmark is in the works.

Mayor Giuliani said yesterday that the new plan calls for an interdenominational service to be held at 3 p.m. Sunday at Yankee Stadium in the Bronx.

Giuliani said he hopes to hold a service in Central Park later on, but the time isn't right this week.

With the police already having to secure the scene of the nation's worst-ever terrorist attack, the mayor said, the security needed for a huge gathering in the park would overtax the NYPD's resources.

There was another reason the mayor thought it best to put off planning for a Central Park event.

"We thought it was important to have a service of prayer, but that it was too early to have a memorial service," Giuliani said on the eighth day after the disaster. "It's too early in the recovery and relief effort, and too early in the grieving process."

The plan for Sunday tentatively calls for a Yankee Stadium service to be simulcast on the Jumbotrons at the city's two minor league baseball parks — in Coney Island and Staten Island.

Still, seating would be limited and by ticket only, and preference would go to victims' families, Giuliani said.

The rest of the tickets probably would be distributed by the religious leaders organizing the prayer service and by the uniformed services it would honor.
