Deadly toll is now put at 6,965

The city's tally of people reported missing at the World Trade Center jumped to 6,333 yesterday, bringing the nationwide total feared dead in the Sept. 11 terror attacks to 6,965.

The toll at the twin towers jumped 911 from the day before, the largest increase since the early days after the disaster. Mayor Giuliani attributed the bulk of the new reports to "getting numbers from foreign nationals."

The spike followed a meeting Wednesday of officials from the city and the State Department at which the federal officials were asked to rally consulates to help relatives of foreign nationals submit missing-persons forms.

The nationwide total includes casualties from the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and the hijacked plane that crashed outside Pittsburgh.

The new twin towers tally of 6,333 "may go up or down depending on our checking it against possible duplication from other sources," Giuliani said. City officials are cross-checking the names submitted by foreign consulates with names provided by businesses and individual families, he said.

Consulates also assisting

In addition, consulates have been asked to help gather DNA samples from foreign families with missing loved ones, said Munshi Ahmed, consul general of Bangladesh.

Medical examiners can obtain DNA samples from combs, toothbrushes and other personal effects.

They also can use blood samples from female relatives of a missing person to determine the likely identity of bodies and body parts.

Some consular officials feared that families of missing persons have not contacted them or the city.

"What we're concerned about are visitors to the Trade Center, tourists or possibly illegal aliens," said Petr Gandalovic, a Czech Republic consulate official.

The Czech Consulate fielded 200 calls and eventually forwarded 10 names to the official list.

Other nations have been hitting the pavement to refine their lists.

"We even sent people out to knock on doors," said Peter Lloyd, consul of Canada, which had 35 to 50 people unaccounted for yesterday.

The Indian Consulate has fielded 900 missing-person reports. Like many other consulates, the Indian agency spent days tracking down hundreds of people. Many had either escaped from the buildings or were not at the twin towers when the planes struck.

Consular officials have whittled their lists to about 200 Indians believed to have been at the World Trade Center during the attack.

"It's been a lot of detective work," said Ashok Bajpai, an Indian consular official.

As of yesterday, the city's list of missing included 84 people of Indian descent, a consulate official said. That means that about 115 Indians believed to be missing have not been tallied by the city.

Send photos of victims

The Daily News is seeking photographs of people who are missing or dead in the World Trade Center disaster to aid in news coverage and identification.

The photos should be labeled with the victim's name, age, occupation and community of residence, and the name, address and phone number of a contact person.
