You're right, this is generic language, appropriate PPE - could mean no PPE, but we'll delete the sentence to be clear.

If these buildings were not affected, OSHA sees no reason to require PPE or to be concerned about any airborne contaminants.

Is boiler plate language being used?

These people are sampling in "CLEAN" apartments. All employers should be aware of, and in compliance with, OSHA regulations. However, in this cases, if safety and health plans are necessary, then this need must be linked to something other than background sampling in apartments unaffected by WTC.

Please distribute to the Indoor Air Work Group and the COPC group. This is basically final after including comments from folks over the last month or so, we hope to get this to our contracts folks this week. Any comments are needed this week. We feel as though we've resolved all of the issues at this point. Thanks.
