THEIR LEGACY OF LOVE

OVERWHELMING GRIEF: Mictsho Maynard is steadied by FDNY members at the funeral yesterday of her cousin Keithroy Maynard. Steven Hirsch

Farewell to 2 more of the Bravest

By TODD VENEZIA and CATHY BURKE

Stories of enormous courage and boundless love were exchanged yesterday at memorial services for two firefighters who remain among those missing at the devastated World Trade Center.

Firefighters Keithroy Maynard, 30, and Edward Rall, 44, were mourned in separate services in Brooklyn, where Maynard lived, and in Holbrook, L.I., where Rall raised his family.

"I miss Keithroy Maynard, who is my dad," proclaimed a solemn 6-year-old Keithroy Maynard II at a service at Old First Reformed Church in Park Slope. "I love him. My dad is a hero."

Among the mourners were City Public Advocate and former mayoral candidate Mark Green, along with representatives from the city, state and the Caribbean island of Montserrat, where Maynard was born.

Tragically, a distant cousin, Army Staff Sgt. Maudeline White, also a native of Montserrat, died in the Sept. 11 attack on the Pentagon, mourners said.

Maynard was remembered as a bright, politically active and courageous firefighter.

Maynard also belonged to the FDNY's Vulcan Society, an organization of black firefighters, becoming its youngest-ever member of the executive board.

At Good Shepherd Church in Holbrook — where the funerals of two other firefighters have been held in recent weeks — a memorial Mass for Rall, of Brooklyn's Rescue 2, was said by Monsignor Thomas Spadaro, as more than 800 crowded inside.

Like Maynard, Rall remains among the missing in the rubble of the trade center.

Instead, his three children, Joseph, 16, Matthew, 14, and Daniel, 12, brought in their dad's fire helmets and a fireman's statue — all of which were placed along with a picture of Rall and an urn given to the family by the city at the front of the church.

"Relatives recalled that he was very much a family man," Spadaro said. "Eddie had two great loves: his family and the Fire Department."
